"My husband and I attended an Immersion Workshop hosted at Fraser Center in November of 2008. Our time spent that weekend was revolutionary for our family. The PACE Place model of empowering parents was just what we needed to regain control in our family. We had been reacting to the loudest, biggest behaviors from our son, at the expense of our other children. Learning about how a brain with autism works and the resulting behaviors was like having our eyes opened; we could finally understand some of what our son is going through and how our reaction to his behaviors was negatively affecting both he and our family. During the day of private consultation, the consultants worked small miracles with our son. They were able to keep him calm and keep him with us during the activities. When entering the large atrium at the zoo, our son became very agitated and his voice got louder and he was running ahead of us. We remained very calm and had him sit down with us on a bench and wait until the "Icky feeling" passed. It was amazing! After a few minutes, our son relaxed in the new environment and we were able to enjoy the zoo together. We learned to "Change how he feels and change how he thinks." This new understanding now guides every decision we make. Since the workshop, our son is now toilet trained and sleeping through the night. I attribute those changes to the new thinking my husband and I learned from watching our consultants work with our son, coupled with hard-work and persistence on our part. Our son is much happier, and so are the rest of our children. The PACE Immersion Workshop was just what we needed--help for our family and help for our everyday lives."
